Buffalo, New York, Attorney Finds in Salt River Valley All the Elements of the Ideal Residence Place

William T. Doane, an attorney of Buffalo, N. Y., is in the city visiting Fred Larson, with whom he was formerly associated in the practice of law in Texas. This is the first visit of Mr. Doane to Phoenix, though he many times passed through the state on his way to the coast. He has already felt the call of Phoenix and will probably decide to settle here permanently.

Both the climate and the state of the citrus growing industry appeal to Mr. Doane for he has for some years been interested in citrus growing. He is the owner of an orange and grape fruit orchard in the Isle of Pines south of Cuba. The marketing problem is the chief difficulty there but that is in the way of solution. On account of the war most of the fruit was left on the trees last year. But the Isle of Pines is not a place where an American would like to live except when taking a vacation. It is about forty-five miles square, with a normal population, exclusive of the native population, of about 5000. The winter population is about double that. The natives are descendants of the old buccanniers, one of whose strongholds was on the island in the days of Henry Morgan. There is a strong negro element in the natives.

The climate is a pleasant one, the temperature ranging between 70 and 90. Trade winds blow there almost constantly. Formerly all commerce between the United States and the island was conducted through Cuba. Fruit and other products were generally transhipped at Havana. But a line of fruit steamers has been lately established.

There are many native fruits in the island of which nothing had been known. They are beginning now to attract the attention of New Yorkers. On a single ranch in the island there are sixty varieties of native fruits, many of them most delicious. Mr. Doane speaking of municipal government said that the commission form had been adopted in Buffalo but it will not go into effect until January 1, 1916. Whether it will cure the ills of which the people of Buffalo complain, Mr. Doane said he was uncertain but things had reached such a pass there that citizens regarded any change that might be made as necessarily a change for the better.

Mr. Doane is a relative of Bishop William C. Doane of the Episcopal church, known as "William of Allegheny," with the exception of the late Bishop Potter, the foremost prelate of the church in this country.

PHOENIX GIRL GIVEN OVATION

Miss Alice Redewill Makes Debut in Los Angeles and Scores Great Success—To Be Heard Here in Recital Easter Monday

Alice Redewill scored a decided triumph last evening when she made her American debut in Los Angeles as soloist with Fisher's Los Angeles orchestra. She received a tremendous ovation—greater perhaps than any pianist was ever accorded on the coast. At the conclusion of Saint-Saens' Concerto No. 2, which she played brilliantly. Her group of solo numbers were rendered with true artistry that gained the Arizona girl the reputation in this country all that the music masters of the world proclaimed for her abroad.

Enthusiasm is growing apace as the day of her local recital draws near. The date has been decided and on Easter Monday evening at the Arizona School of Music, music lovers will be given the most notable treat of the year and of many years.

It was from a Phoenix teacher that Miss Redewill received her first lessons in music and she was only a very small child with a very great love for music when Mrs. W. E. Defty placed her tiny hands on the keyboard. But long before she acquired the foundation of her musical education from Mrs. Defty, she evinced a strong inclination for music and before she could flip the simple nursery rhymes, she would sing the airs dear to all children. When she was three years of age, she played with one hand and two years later her playing of popular airs attracted the attention of the musical critics of the papers on the coast where she was at that time. "Little Alice is a prodigy and we predict for her a brilliant future," they declared.

Laura Ramel of San Francisco is the instructor to whom Miss Redewill gives credit for imparting to her, her exquisite touch which has won her such unstinted admiration. The young artist always disliked reading by note and at this time depended entirely upon her ear. From this has come her remarkable power for memorizing, however long and difficult. It is no task for her today to memorize concertos of thirty to forty pages, occupying some of them, three quarters of an hour in rendition. She has been known to play through an entire book of sonatas she has not seen for three years.

While she was learning to read music she made excellent progress in school. She was educated at Mills College and while there continued her musical education under Dr. Lissner for three years. The twelve months that followed were passed at home and here she studied with Homer Grinn of the Arizona School of Music and acted as organist for the church services of the Trinity Pro-Cathedral as well as accompanist of the Sunday School orchestra of the Presbyterian church of which her brother, Dr. Francis H. Redewill, was director.

Upon the invitation of the Redewills, Harold Bauer appeared in Phoenix. The distinguished pianist also heard Miss Redewill play. He urged her to go to Paris and at the Paris Conservatory she studied under him for three years. She played at the Students' Atelier, known as the Parisian great art critic center receiving the encomium of all the artists present. It was on her return home that she gave a recital at the School of Music that is remembered by all those who were fortunate enough to be in the audience.

When she again arrived in Paris and was advised by Bauer to go to Vienna and enter the artists class. All who have followed her work abroad remember that the Phoenix girl was one of the chosen four of the hundred aspirants to gain entrance to the masters' class of the Imperial Royal Academy. She played from Bach, Chopin and Liszt and was not allowed to finish before she was accepted. The president of the academy requested her to play the Grieg concerto which had never been played there before. Six other pianists were asked to play the same concerto and the best artist was to play it with the orchestra at the close of the term. There was a tense silence as Miss Redewill played the final notes then came the words spoken quietly, "Orchestra rehearsal tomorrow morning at nine o'clock."
